(b) and (c) Universal Health Insurance Scheme (UHIS) was launched in July, 2003. For families below poverty line (BPL), a subsidy of Rs. 100 per family was provided. The scheme was redesigned and launched in September, 2004, restricting the coverage to BPL families only with a subsidy of Rs. 200, Rs. 300 and Rs. 400 for an individual, for a family of 5 and for a family of 7 members respectively. It was felt that the original UHIS was skewed in favour of the non-poor. As a result, only a very small number of BPL families (9252) were covered. Keeping this in view, it was decided to make the scheme exclusively for people below poverty line and also to enhance the subsidy. This resulted in substantial increase in the coverage of BPL families from 9252 in 2003-04 to 65, 718 in 2004-05 and 50,872 in 2005-06 (upto October, 2005).
